RECOMMENDATIONS.

First and simplest: Is the known fact that the bitter-enemies of God and Religion have been also the most persistently bitter opponents of this work. The devil himself tried every way in his power to prevent its being written in the first place; and with him ever since its first appearance, his visible agents -- outstandingly the jansenist and atheistic members of the Parisian Sorbonne - have in every way possible, hindered its circulation.

Hence, its warmest friends and staunchest defenders from among the most zealous of the Bishops, the Cardinals, the Generals of different orders, Catholic universities and Popes themselves, from Innocent XI and Clement XI down. So that such recommendations would fill a good sized volume themselves.

But better than any of these, or perhaps all of them together, if studied in the light of faith and confident heart with which the writer must have written it, is the simple but masterly introductions by the humble writer herself, - most privileged disciple and actual Secretary in the writing of this climax-compendium at once of sacred history, of moral and dogmatic and of ascetic and mystic theology; the life - Nay more the autobiography of the Queen of the universe.
